

ARE YOU HIRING ILLEGAL IMMIGRANTS? HOW DO YOU KNOW???

In our country, the debate over illegal immigration has reached a boiling point.

Some want amnesty for undocumented workers. Others want criminal punishment for illegal aliens and the companies that hire them.

Congress is expected to decide what should happen perhaps as early as this month. Whichever direction it goes, roughly 11 million illegal immigrants will be affected.

That's how many the government estimates are in our country right now. The investment firm Bear Stearns puts that number even higher – 20 million! Seventy percent, according to the Pew Hispanic Center, are from Mexico.

For many, it's economic prosperity that draws them to the United States. But since 1986 the onus has been on companies to turn them away.

And yet while employers are on the front lines of sorting "legal" from "illegal" workers little has been done to help them.

Now more than ever, documents like birth certificates, visas, social security cards and drivers' licenses are easy to forge. And a federal program called Basic Pilot that's supposed to be of assistance is hardly that at all.

While it allows employers to use a database to find out whether there's a match between an applicant's name and Social Security number, it cannot tell the employer whether the information belongs to the applicant sitting in the Human Resources department. It isn't in widespread use either.

BUT THERE IS A SOLUTION

API Services has a service that in seconds verifies the authenticity of government-issued identification: everything from drivers' licenses to visas to passports.

We call it the ePAC Solution. No keystrokes are required. No "eye-balling." No guess work either. A machine with a computer interface does it all - INSTANTLY!
